

Acknowledgements

The book Why research distance education? was borne out of some decades of practice by the editors on how research can impact practice in the field of distance education.

We hope that the budding field of distance education as a field of study on the continent will also find the book useful.

We are indebted to Dr Heather Thuynsma of ESI Press and the University of Free State, South Africa for their support.

Our appreciation to Dr Tony Mays (Commonwealth of Learning, Burnaby, Canada), who closely worked with us for his recommendations and valued advice throughout our journey. We also thank Prof. Lynette Jacobs for the initial critical reading of some of the chapters. A special word of gratitude also goes to the academics who tirelessly contributed to the double-blind review of the manuscripts and the valuable comments that have enhanced the quality of the book.

Thank you also to Dr Mary Ooko, Manager, Unit for Distance Education, University of Pretoria for her continued support of the publication.

Finally, our sincere appreciation to all the authors for their dedication to distance education and their willingness to be part of the publication by sharing their knowledge and experience.